The beautiful experience of a grand piano is not just feeling the sound of the soundboard, or feeling the soundboard as a single mechanical object. Our senses are not able to do that well enough. What a player really feels is the different resonances of the soundboard given by the various strings, arm structure and soundboard properties. You can use music machines or multichannel amplifiers, but instruments at the club are unfixed and often have a mechanical problem. In order to determine the difference of a museum instrument, I encourage you to try it both clean and with some other damage. Exposing defects and spots are the most important things to find out how to deal with. One of my secrets is to see a pianos' defects using the proper method, and to stick to that method while cleaning. Don't use a very rough towel or brush and polish like removing the coat of paint, so this will not only cause environmental damage, but will also get rid of the cracks and spots on the surface. There is not much information available about the choice of a new condition piano, but you can buy any quality piano and set the frequency response in the piano manufacturer's recommendation. All the pieces of the piano need to be retuned. Even between instruments of different manufacturers, some of them may be tuned differently and the only way to find it out is to try to retune the piano to the manufacturer's recommendation. Pianos should be in a good condition to be able to play. They do not play if they cannot reach the keys, but do not pluck the strings with outstretched fingers. The piano has no space, rather there is an enclosed space with a fraction of a meter. The space is due to the fact that the instrument was created with a particular design and size. A grand piano has a width of at least 1.0 meters, in other words, a width of more than a meter.
