In the dipping method, a number of green products are dipped in a coating bath. A number of dipping stations may be used, with the products being passed from one dipping station to another. For example, the products may be submerged in the coating bath in a tray having a central opening through which the products are submerged and removed from the coating bath in a continuous manner. In the air spraying method, a liquid coating is sprayed onto a product. Conventionally, a number of cups holding a solution to be sprayed are attached to a spray head and moved over a product that is to be coated. The cups, or spray heads, move in a circular pattern so that the coating solution is sprayed onto a
