Amaestros are hundreds of thousands of years old. They were once the driving force of the universe but as the universe collapsed, they disappeared. Now, most amaestros are gone and humanity is the last remaining form of life. You are still alive at this terrible time. Your kind, the "human race", are now enslaved by the amaestros, but they live to destroy everything in their path, before they cease to exist. You stand against them, you fight to survive. Your task is to traverse the world and destroy all the amaestros in it, before you too are extinct. How do you do it? The first step towards your goal is to join a co-op group. You can do this by either using the in-game chat, or the Facebook messenger. Choose a partner, talk to them, and they'll direct you. Once you start, you go on a journey to the last dungeon. Every dungeon has 3 amaestros, and you both need to defeat them to proceed. All of the dungeons are procedurally generated, meaning they are unique every time you play. Loot includes weapons, armor, books, potions, food, mana, bricks (as bricks are needed to build things in the next dungeon), and money. The world is freeform, not limited to a single dimension or set of tiles. Your goal is to destroy all amaestros, and save as many people as you can. Online multiplayer, local multiplayer. - Online Multiplayer: Select a partner in the in-game chat, create a new co-op group and begin together. Co-op groups are automatically matched together. You will need to be on the same team at the start of the dungeon. If someone leaves the group, the other one will wait for a while before being dropped. - Local Multiplayer: With local multiplayer you can play split screen with another person. The game uses players coordinates for input meaning there is no lag! When playing local multiplayer in co-op mode, it is recommended to use analog stick input for movement and the d-pad to move your character. Note: Players can choose to use a gamepad, or analog stick to move, but the game will work fine if users choose to use a gamepad. --- More Info at: c9d1549cdd

- An Thermal Image-Based Mouse Introduction Update - 09.10.2013: We have now made all of the source code available, and the source can be found on GitHub. For more information, please visit www.exad.co.uk In this article, we'll show how you can use the Tiger Paw (also known as the Cursor-M) to image-based drive a proof-of-concept mouse. We will first revisit the concept of image-based mice and then show how you can use this to map a tiger paw into the output of a mouse and how this would work. For anyone interested in how we got to this point and the challenges we faced along the way, please continue on to the conclusion. Some background In the basic architectures of both desktop mice (a.k.a. light pens) and handheld mice (a.k.a. trackball devices), you will find that they are both based on optical sensing. When a light source is used, any light that is reflected off of things in the surface of the mouse (such as the trackball) is recorded on an IR detector. If we perform a simple tracing of a single point or edge, we use this information to interpolate the distance from the cursor to the mouse. In a desktop mouse, this interpolation is done in order to provide precision. In a handheld mouse, this is quite different. We have typically used mobile calibration software, which can be used to map specific buttons on the device. In using this technique, the handheld mouse software will iterate over these buttons until it finds a button that maps most accurately to this generic button. In essence, the hardware on hand lets us fine-tune the button mapping of most handheld mice, while the desktop mouse allows us to do the same for light pens, in a much more generic approach. For the purpose of this article, we will limit ourselves to creating something that would allow a light pen to emulate the motion and output of a mouse. While there are currently a number of desktop mice that are based on thermal sensing, we will only be looking at one for our use-case: the Tiger Paw. This has been around since 2004, and is a great device for several reasons. Not only does it offer a minimal design (it won't weigh you down), it also has a very regular footprint, making it simple to fit into existing hardware. It also

1938 Windsor Charity Shield The 1938 Windsor Charity Shield was an association football match contested by Tranmere Rovers and Brighton & Hove Albion on 3 March 1938. The Shield was financed by the Charity Organisation Society, thanks to donations from sports associations, and survived the disbanding of The Football League in 1992. The game ended in a 1-1 draw, and with the ongoing outbreak of the Second World War the Shield was never replayed. Match report Tranmere opened the scoring after four minutes through Dave King, who shot past the Brighton goalkeeper in among a sea of Albion defenders. Four minutes later, Samuel Shaw gave the crowd at the Albert Ground the added pleasure of seeing a Hove player turn the ball on to his own goal-line. Within a minute, Albion had equalised through centre-forward Albert Brown, who struck home to equalise the score. Shaw's dribbling skills later earned him a second chance, and his shot hit the post and bounced clear into goal. There followed a low shot from Bill Pritchard and then a diving tackle by Pritchard on Kingscombe, resulting in a sending off. Tranmere clearly missed Charlie Wayman, who was serving a ban. With the game poised at 1-1, in the 60th minute, Fleetwood Edwards took advantage of what was effectively a goal-kicker penalty and his shot bent into the top corner to give Tranmere a 2-1 lead. It proved to be Tranmere's last shot on target in the match, conceding 57 of the 59 goals they faced.
