To ensure a homogeneous clinical and histological perspective of our study, all the enrolled patients were diagnosed with CD by a single expert endoscopist, who was experienced in the detection of CD. Moreover, the baseline and follow-up endoscopies were performed by the same operator. In both groups, the method of recruitment was random. At the time of enrolment, a prospective questionnaire was administered to all patients to collect data on gluten-containing food intake and presence of CD-related symptoms. In this manner, we sought to document the subjects' behavior and the real-life eating habits that could have influenced the diagnosis. While in real life CD-related symptoms could be related to the simple presence of gluten, it is also possible that some patients simply fail to report symptoms that are possibly related to the consumption of gluten. In a prospective study, this phenomenon is clearly expected. However, in a retrospective study, it should be taken into consideration that a subject could report his symptoms in response to the challenge itself, even if not related to gluten intake. In an environment of poverty, there may be real difficulties in the adequate education of women and, in particular, of adolescent girls. In this context, although gender equality does not necessarily provide for equal access to education, it is necessary that girls are not discriminated against, except in the case of girls in primary education (grades 1 to 8), who are less often schooled than boys in poor countries. While the existence of guarantees of gender equality in Article 26 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child will tend to remedy this situation, the absence of specific guarantees on access to education, in particular for girls, in the draft text on the rights of the child, adopted by the Forty-third session of the United Nations General Assembly, will have to be remedied. The existing guidelines of the Organization of American States provide for the realization of the goal set in this paragraph. The expectation is that the intention of the new Convention on the Rights of the Child will be to ensure more completely the promotion of the full and equal enjoyment by women and men of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to the end that the human rights obligations of States should be fulfilled and consolidated.

iga nephropathy (igan) is the most common form of glomerulonephritis worldwide. the world health organization estimates that the global prevalence is approximately 25/100 000, with up to 50% of patients presenting with renal impairment at the time of diagnosis. the disease is largely asymptomatic, but proteinuria and hematuria are commonly seen, and the risk of developing end-stage renal disease is increased in igan.

epidemiologic data indicate that igan is predominantly a disease of young adults.

the disease is highly prevalent in asia, particularly in east asia, and has recently been described in africa and the middle east. over the last two decades, an increasing number of studies have shown a significant genetic component in igan.

although strong evidence has suggested that igan is an immune-mediated disease, the exact pathogenesis remains unclear.

recent genome-wide association studies have identified a large number of susceptibility genes for igan, and a number of animal models of igan have been developed. this review will discuss our current understanding of igan pathogenesis and the emerging treatment possibilities. in the previous work, we used the data from the annual national health interview to study the risk factors for diabetes development in the greek population. in addition, we have found the following associations: there was a positive correlation between the frequencies of fast food intake and the incidence of diabetes (20). in the current analysis, we used data from the 1990, 2000, and 2010 national surveys on drug use and health, each of which is a household-based, cross-sectional survey conducted by the substance abuse and mental health services administration. we used data from the 2004 national survey on drug use and health on the number of methamphetamine users at the time of the survey. to classify persons as methamphetamine users, we followed the international statistical classification of diseases and related health problems, 10th revision guidelines for the addiction severity index. we used these data to estimate the number of methamphetamine users in the united states for each year. to illustrate regional differences in methamphetamine use, we used the most recent national estimates of self-reported methamphetamine users from the 2010 national survey on drug use and health and calculated methamphetamine users per 100,000 population in each state (see the online technical appendix at the end of this article). 5ec8ef588b
